TEACHING

Doctoral Core Curriculum Courses Developed and Taught in the Department of Maternal and Child Health (MHCH)

Course Title: MHCH 801, Doctoral Seminar

Description: This course complements the master's level Foundations in MCH course by providing incoming Doctoral students with more in-depth and research-focused discussion concerning some of the current issues in maternal and child health. Required for all first-year Doctoral students in the Department of Maternal and Child Health.

Course Title: MHCH 260, Conceptualization, Design, and Measurement

Description: This course, originally developed by Drs. Martin and Schaefer in 1991, presents information concerning all aspects of the formulation of a research grant proposal. It focused on the conceptualization of a research question and moves through the design of a study methodology to address the question, with an emphasis on measurement issues. Students prepare a research grant proposal following the NIH guidelines for their final assignment. Required for all Doctoral students in the Department of Maternal and Child Health.

Course Title: MHCH 261, Maternal and Child Health Secondary Data Analysis

Description: This course, originally developed by Drs. Martin and Kotelchuck in 1990, was taught every other year and focuses on using secondary data for Maternal and Child Health evaluation and planning activities. Students define a research question that may be addressed through the analysis of a publicly available data set, conduct statistical analyses, and prepares a manuscript of their findings. This was a required course for all Doctoral students in the Department of Maternal and Child Health.

Course Title: MHCH 262, Maternal and Child Health Program Evaluation

Description: This course, originally developed by Drs. Martin and Kotelchuck in 1993, generally has been taught every other year. It exposes students to all aspects of Maternal and Child Health program evaluation including conceptualization of the questions to be addressed, negotiation with pertinent stakeholders, project management, strategies for conducting evaluation analyses, and feedback of findings to all of those involved in the process. Required for all Doctoral students in the Department of Maternal and Child Health.

Master’s Program Core Curriculum Courses Taught in the Department of Maternal and Child Health (MHCH)

Course Title: MHCH 213, Research and Evaluation Methods in Maternal and Child Health

Description: This course introduces an overview of methods used in Maternal and Child Health research, including needs assessment, secondary data analysis, and program evaluation. Lectures are accompanied by a Statistical Computing Lab which introduces students to SAS. Course assignments include conducting a secondary data analysis using birth certificate data and designing a plan for a program evaluation. This was a required course for all research-oriented Master’s students in the Department of Maternal and Child Health, and now, although not required of all students, it is still the basic research course for our Master’s students.

Doctoral/Master’s Program Elective Courses Developed and Taught in the Department of Maternal and Child Health (MHCH)

Course Title: MHCH 732 (previously 890, Section 1), Gender-Based Violence

Description: The MHCH Gender-Based Violence (GBV) course provides a forum for students to explore contemporary issues in GBV from both a research and practice standpoint. Students will be introduced to a myriad of domestic and international GBV issues, from intimate partner violence and campus sexual assault to conflict-related GBV and sex trafficking. Students will become acquainted with the GBV-related research of many UNC faculty members as these faculty members will present lectures on their own research during many of the class meetings. The lectures will include information on research issues faced in the context of studying GBV, such as strategies for assessing GBV and evaluating GBV prevention and intervention programs. The lectures are designed to enhance students’ understanding of many important GBV research topics and facilitate the application of this knowledge (and the learned skills) to real world settings.

Course Title: MHCH 253 Violence Against Women

Description: This course, originally developed by Dr. Martin in 1995, presents an overview of issues concerning violence against women using a public health approach. Information is presented concerning various definitions of violence against women, theoretical perspectives used to examine violence against women, risk factors and outcomes associated with violence against women, and medical/community responses to violence against women.

Independent Study Courses Developed and Taught for Maternal and Child Health Doctoral/Master's and Other Students

Description: These courses are designed to meet the individual needs of each student and vary in content from year to year. Typically, students and the instructor meet for 2-3 hours a week to discuss the students' learning objectives and the progress. The topics of the courses vary greatly by students' interests. For example, in 1992, three students were interested in learning about the health of incarcerated Maternal and Child Health populations, so the course focused on the health of incarcerated women and their children.

Video-Conferencing/Internet Courses

Course Title: MHCH 253 (001) Violence Against Women

Description: This multi-media course uses video-conferencing, a web-based syllabus, a web-based discussion forum to link together several 3 UNC campuses (namely, UNC-Chapel Hill, UNC-Wilmington, and NC Central) to receive the Violence Against Women course. These cross-site activities are complemented by site-specific activities. The development of this course has been funded by the Chancellor’s Office of the UNC at Chapel Hill and by the Sunshine Lady Foundation.

Community-Wide Internet and In-Person Seminars

Title: Wish Academy (Women’s Integrated Systems for Health)

Description: This distance based training program for public health and mental health professionals is led by Dr. Dorothy Cilenti. It focuses on promoting integrative community approaches to optimize mental and physical health among women of reproductive age.

Role: I prepared and delivered a module concerning Trauma Informed Care for Women (spring 2013).

Title: Seminar in Domestic Violence

Description: This seminar series, led by Dr. Beth Moracco, assisted by Dr. Martin and others, presents an overview of issues concerning domestic violence using a multidisciplinary approach. The seminar series is open to the general public and the campus community. Those attendees who wish to take the course for credit sign up for an independent study credits with Drs. Moracco and Martin.
