

UNC Gillings School of Global Public Health invites you to ...

We are looking for striking photographs that illustrate aspects of public health in North Carolina. Examples might include people working in their gardens, raising fresh fruits and vegetables; physical activity in our great outdoors; or your own public health projects that involve our neighbors, young and old. We want to feature photographs of our state from Cherokee to Currituck.

Grand Prize: $250; Runners-up (up to 5): $50 each

Entry deadline: March 30, 2012

The contest is open to all current UNC students, faculty and staff members, alumni and friends. Photographs must be taken in North Carolina and illustrate some aspect of life and health in the state. Please let us know the location and how the subject of the photo relates to public health.

Entries will be judged by a committee of faculty and staff members and students from the UNC public health school, based both upon artistic merit and the effective representation of public health programs and practices in the state and/or the School's influence in North Carolina.

Digital entries should be of high resolution, reproducible at 300 dpi as 8"x10" prints or larger. Photographers are responsible for obtaining appropriate permissions from photo subjects (see permissions form) and shall grant UNC Gillings School of Global Public Health permission to use the photos without charge on the School's website, in printed magazines and brochures, in school-related emails, as prints displayed in the School, or other uses as School personnel see fit.

Submit digital photographs to linda_kastleman@unc.edu, or contact Linda Kastleman at 919.966.8317.
