A dyad approach to combination HIV prevention in pregnancy for Zambia and Malawi

We study uses a comprehensive dyad-based framework to design a multi-component HIV prevention package to: (1) increase coverage of partner HIV testing in antenatal settings, (2) improve ART uptake and adherence, and (3) provide pre-exposure prophylaxis to HIV-negative pregnant women at elevated risk for HIV acquisition. We will develop our evidence-based intervention package in three phases. In Phase 1, we will conduct systematic reviews, mathematical modeling, and formative research to inform our interventions. In Phase 2, we will review the gathered materials at a technical consensus meeting and design a combination HIV prevention package targeting partner dyads in antenatal settings. We will engage stakeholders and refine our approach through dissemination-revision cycles. In Phase 3, the component interventions will be rigorously evaluated, focusing on feasibility and proximal health outcomes (e.g., viral suppression). These empiric data will then be used to inform our impact assessment and our recommendations for bringing the intervention to scale.

A Multilevel Intervention to Reduce HIV Risk among Networks of Men in Tanzania

The proposed cluster randomized trial is designed to evaluate the efficacy of a multilevel intervention to reduce HIV risk and perpetration of gender-based violence among social networks of young men in Dar es Salaam. The intervention, which combines microfinance with health leadership training, addresses structural and social determinants of young men's HIV risk by leveraging the strong social network ties that exist among men who socialize together in "camps." If proven successful, our intervention approach has important implications for engaging young men in efforts to reduce HIV and gender-based violence in other global settings.
