RESEARCH INTERESTS

My research assesses the role of economic and social welfare public policies on health-related behaviors, with a particular emphasis on tobacco and alcohol use. Specifically, I seek to better understand: 1) the ways in which state or local public policies and other contextual factors influence individual health behaviors; 2) the role of policies and places in producing health inequities; and 3) state and policymaker characteristics that impact the adoption and dissemination of health-related laws. My goal is to generate innovative, transdisciplinary research that can inform both public health interventions and legislative strategies.

TEACHING AND INSTRUCTION

Systems Approaches to Understanding Public Health Issues (SPHG713), Online and Residential Course Co-Developer, 2017-2018, Online Co-Lead, 2018-2023. Residential Co-Lead and Instructor, 2018-current.

Description: This course explores: 1) what constitutes a public health issue and why; 2) systems approaches to understanding factors that determine population health patterns and inequities; and 3) strategies for communicating with diverse audiences about public health issues. This course is part of a 12-credit, 2-semester integrated core public health training program completed by all MPH and terminal MSPH students in the Gillings School of Global Public Health.

Enrollment & Format: Enrollment of 150-300 students per semester (residential), 50-100 students (online).

Theoretical and Conceptual Foundations of Health Behavior (HBEH 815/816), Instructor, Population Health (Fall) and Social Determinants of Health (Spring) Modules, 2011–2020; Complete 816 course: Spring 2021-current.

Description: Seminar course required for first year doctoral students in the Health Behavior department. The seven-week population health module provides an overview of concepts, frameworks and normative underpinnings of population health and behavior. The six-week social determinants of health module is designed to facilitate student understanding of the ways in which social structures might impact opportunities, lived experiences and choices related to health.

Enrollment & Format: 9-14 students per semester; Residential.

Social and Behavioral Sciences in Public Health (HBEH 600), Instructor, Fall, Spring & Summer as offered, 2004–2020, Co-Instructor, Spring, 2000–2003, Teaching Assistant, Spring, 1999.

Description: Survey course required for most public health undergraduate and master's students specializing in fields other than health behavior to introduce them to health behavior theory, health promotion program planning and implementation, and program evaluation.

Enrollment & Format: Average of 100 students per semester; Residential, online, and hybrid (combined residential and online) versions.

Foundations of Public Health Practice (SPHG 710). Course Developer (2015-2016), Co-Instructor (Summer 2016, Spring 2017).

Description: Requirement for students enrolled in the GO (Global Online) MPH program, this course is designed to help students identify public health problems in a specific global context, and then use theory, evidence, and local information to begin planning potential programs or policies to create change. Students also build practical skills in intervention proposal development and policy brief writing.

Enrollment & Format: 6-7 students per semester (pilot year); Online.

Undergraduate Service Learning Project (HBHE 891) Academic Instructor, Summer 2011.

Description: This course accompanied an individual student's service learning internship with the American Red Cross. Coursework was designed to provide academic foundations of relevance not only to the student's specific internship experience, but also to the broader field of health education.

Enrollment & Format: 1 student, Independent study.

Introduction to Public Health (HBHE 700) Co-Instructor, Fall 2008.

Description: Lecture course designed to provide first year master's students with an orientation to the fields of public health and health behavior and health education.

Enrollment & Format: 45 students; Residential.

Social Determinants of Health (HBHE 802/EPID 825) Instructor, Fall 2004–2007.

Description: Elective course designed to familiarize health behaviour and epidemiology graduate students with sociological theory in the context of public health, and provide and in-depth exploration of social determinants prevalent in public health literature, and the theoretical and practical application of social theory to public health research and intervention.

Enrollment & Format: 13-16 students per semester; Residential.

Principles of Statistical Inference Teaching Assistant, 1998.
