TEACHING ACTIVITIES

Courses Taught in the Past Three Years at UNC-Chapel Hill

MHCH 890: Decolonizing Maternal and Child Health Research: Theory and Qualitative Methods (3 credits)

This graduate seminar will provide Maternal and Child Health (MCH) students with an opportunity to examine key theories and qualitative methodologies that advance anti-racist, abolitionist, intersectional feminist, and emancipatory scholarship for health equity and reproductive justice. Students will gain a deeper understanding of the intellectual foundations of research justice. They will learn to design research questions, data collection strategies, and analytic techniques that decolonize knowledge production.

Fall 2021 – (TBA)

Cultural Humility (1 credit)

This is a 1 credit course in the 3-credit Professional Development Series for the Gillings MPH Global Health Concentration. This skills-oriented course covers topics related to applying cultural humility in global health research, practice, and advocacy.

Spring 2020 - (26 students)

Spring 2021 – (TBA)

MHCH 605 (12936): Survey Course on Breastfeeding and Public Health (3 credits)

This survey course covers principal topics in the broad field of human lactation and breastfeeding policy and practice, including domestic and global issues.

Spring 2018 – (9 students, 1 auditor)

Spring 2020 – (7 students, 2 auditors)

MHCH 890 (11186): Special Topics in MCH: Humanitarian Maternal and Child Health (3 credits)

This graduate seminar covers topics related to research, policy, and public health practices for maternal and child health in humanitarian contexts globally and domestically.

Spring 2019 – (24 students)

Guest Lectures in the Past Three Years at UNC-Chapel Hill

MHCH 859: Doctoral Seminar. Intersectionality and Critical Race Theory.
