Position title: Dissemination intern – Engaging families in HIV-focused postnatal care

Number of positions: 1

Short project description: We conducted qualitative, formative research to examine the feasibility and acceptability of engaging male partners, grandmothers, and other family members to support HIV-positive mothers in Lusaka to practice recommended infant care and feeding practices, and women’s continued antiretroviral therapy adherence. To share the results with key stakeholders in Zambia, we will develop dissemination products for a variety of audiences (e.g. Ministry of Health, health workers, study participants, and clients of prevention of mother-to-child transmission services).

Roles and responsibilities of student:
- Review study protocol and research findings
- Participate in meetings with Zambia-based researchers
- Contribute to the development of a presentation of research findings
- Develop infographics summarizing key findings
- Draft a short policy brief with research findings

Expected outputs:
- Slides for presentation of research findings
- Infographics with research findings for different audiences
- Policy brief summarizing findings

Skills and experience required:
- Current MPH student with interests in nutrition, HIV or global health
- Experience interpreting qualitative data and familiarity with data visualization
- Must be organized, self-motivated, and able to work independently

Supervisor: Stephanie Martin, Department of Nutrition

Minimum duration (minimum 8 weeks): 10 weeks remote, with possibility of travel dependent on university policies
