The Healthy Living, Healthy Learning, Healthy Lives (HL3) Project equitably engages community and academic partners in an effort to investigate, ameliorate and ultimately eliminate, disparities in children's health, with a particular focus on asthma, its correlates, consequences and co-morbidities. The project aims to strengthen and expand the health focus of an existing community-based participatory research (CBPR) partnership; to use the HL3 CBPR partnership to plan and implement a multi-level (individual, family, school, neighborhood, policy) community assessment; and to use the results of the community assessment to plan a multi-level pilot CBPR intervention.

In response to persistent and increasing disparities in childhood asthma, this career development program utilizes qualitative and quantitative methods to examine and address neighborhood-level effects, such as surrounding violence on childhood asthma control. This research will inform, adapt and evaluate evidence-based science into practice. The participatory research process being utilized will integrate quantitative and qualitative methods to examine the role of psychosocial and contextual factors, including the expertise of children in middle childhood ages 8-12 with asthma, parents/caregivers, healthcare providers and a multi-disciplinary advisory board through the application of community-partnered principles of community-based participatory research.
